Hon. A. B. Smith has decided to make a race for lieutenant governor. He has taken over the field, estimated the strength of the probable candidates for the position, and goes in with high hopes of success. He is one of Henry's best citizens. A live, energetic, and enterprising farmer, who has devoted the whole of his life to agricultural pursuits, and is as well posted and deeply interested in every matter of interest to the agricultural and laboring classes of any man in the state. In fact, he has done more to give prominence to their interests than any man in the state. His services in this direction have given him more than a state reputation, and he has frequently been called to other states to assist in movements beneficial to the interests of the people.
